Sweet Spring has come, wel-come the hour,

Stern Win-ter's reign has lost... its power: No more we see his robes of snow, No more we hear his tem-pests blow, But kind...ly

 Freed from its former icy chain,
 The stream reflects the skies again;
 The fields, once hard and cold as stone,
 Have soft and warm and verdant grown;
 And groves so lately mute and drear,
 With notes of joy salute the ear.

 How like the change that wins the heart
 From sin and vanity to part;
 When He, the Sun of righteousness,
 Draws near to soften and to bless;
 With grace the bosom to prepare,
 And plant the seeds of virtue there!

 The Soul's affections, frozen no more,
 Flow onward to their heavenly shore,
 Reflecting all the truth and love,
 Which beam upon them from above;
 While joy assumes the sacred song,
 And tunes to praise the grateful tongue.
